Property Acquisitions

Nearly 200 acres permanently conserved in Portage County through partnership

Portage Park District and the nonprofit Western Reserve Land Conservancy have permanently conserved nearly 200 acres in Portage County.

The organizations partnered in leveraging grant funds to permanently protect 189 acres of high quality natural areas in the City of Streetsboro, an area under continued development pressure. The project, referred to as the Tinkers Creek Greenway, is comprised of two separate tracts of land: 59-acres acquired by the Western Reserve Land Conservancy then transferred to the Portage Park District, and 130 acres acquired directly by the Portage Parks, who will develop and manage it as a public park.

"The Streetsboro project builds upon a corridor of nearly 300 acres of conservation land in the immediate area, including The Nature Conservancy's Evans R. Beck Memorial Nature Preserve, Ohio Department of Natural Resource's Gott Fen State Nature Preserve, the City of Streetsboro's Wilcox Park, and more," noted Chris Szell, director of conservation project management for the Land Conservancy. He added, "Within one mile of the property, you'll find an additional 495 acres of preserved land."

As with many park and conservation projects, the partners pulled in funding from multiple sources. The Land Conservancy's tract was generously funded by the Ohio EPA through the Water Resource Restoration Sponsorship Program (WRRSP), with the Northeast Ohio Regional Sewer District (NEORS), being the sponsor in this case. The OEPA funds were used as local match for the Portage Park's Clean Ohio Conservation Fund grant, along with funds from its voter-approved levy. The landowners even helped out by selling the property at below market value.

"This project provides tremendous value to the community-by protecting rare and important ecosystems, protecting water quality, mitigating stormwater and creating a beautiful new public park for all to enjoy", remarked Christine Craycroft, Executive Director of Portage Park District. Over the next year the park district will be inviting the public to participate in planning for the new park site which includes woods, fields, wetlands and a 30-acre spring-fed lake, previously used as a commercial fishery. Possible opportunities listed by Craycroft include hiking, fishing, kayaking, picnicking, primitive camping and educational programming. The public can stay up to date on the planning process by visiting the park district's website. Read full press release here.
